

Default Article Style

This article is a demo of the standard post treatment: title, date, summary, theme-aware hero image, tag chips, readable body copy, and optional share links.

TileDown keeps that presentation in the generated site layer, so authors write content once and the site applies the house style consistently.

A default article should make the writing feel intentional before the author touches custom layout.

What this page proves

Element	Purpose
Hero image	Provides a strong visual lead in light and dark themes
Article metadata	Shows date and tags without manual markup
Share links	Uses the site option instead of per-post HTML
Body rhythm	Exercises paragraphs, tables, quotes, and headings

:::tile callout title: Site option body: Social share links are enabled once in `tiledown.yml` and appear on published article pages. :::

The goal is a default article format that is good enough for launch notes, technical essays, and product updates without custom templates.
