Tables with room in the editorial theme

A table is wider than a paragraph, and reading one is not reading prose. In the `editorial` theme of TileDown 0.13.0 a table gets its own layout.

theme: editorial

Part	What it does
Measure	A table has a wide measure of its own, `--td-measure-wide` (72rem by default), apart from the prose measure. It is centered on the column and capped to the screen.
Narrow screens	Under 48rem the table goes back to the column and scrolls sideways.
Header	The header row sticks to the top of the page.
Rows	A hairline and a faint stripe made from the ink color, and the last row closes with an ink rule.
Cells	Top aligned, with a readable floor and ceiling on a column's width.

It works in light and dark. The `standard` and `system` themes are unchanged, so a site that does not choose `editorial` builds its tables as before.
